

Fattis N. Mann

Cybersecurity Business Engagement, Senior Manager

Fattis N. Mann is the senior manager of the Cybersecurity Business Engagement team within SAIC's IT Office in the Business Operations Group.

Mann joined SAIC in 2013 as lead risk management cyber security analyst where he successfully supported the review of all enterprise applications and helped build and implement the first enterprise security services program. Day One post-split goals were achieved by insourcing the security operations center, computer incident response team, and Sarbanes-Oxley monitoring programs previously provided by the former Cyber Business Unit.

Throughout his career, Mann has led teams focused on national security, cyber security, law enforcement information systems security, and application development. He has also supported teams for local and federal governments and other corporate enterprise organizations from small businesses to large Fortune 100 and 500 companies during their multiple mergers and acquisitions to include securing a manufacturer of propulsion listening technologies for the largest U.S. Navy prime contractor of those technologies.

Early in his career, Mann was inducted into the Naval Academy, and upon separation he worked in Washington D.C. at the U.S. Soldiers Home and the Smithsonian in the Security Protection Division where his passion for security was piqued by the unique physical, operational and technology convergence challenges museum security integrated to protect irreplaceable heirlooms.

He is a Certified Information System Security Professional (CISSP), Certified in Risk & Information Systems Control (CRISC), Certified Data Privacy Solutions Engineer (CDPSE), and is an active local chapter member of ISC(2) and the ISACA professional organizations.

Mann earned his bachelor's degree from the University of Baltimore after starting his civilian education at Howard University. He completed a portion of his sophomore year of Mechanical Engineering and Officer Training military education at the U.S. Naval Academy.

SAIC

12010 Sunset Hills Road, Reston, VA 20190
703.676.4300 | saic.com